Church Affairs.

Circle 2 of the Aid society of the First Methodist church met Friday night at the home of Mrs. J. R. Fisk, in the Fisk apartments, and spent the evening making rose beads. A short business meeting was held at which Mrs. Joe Carpenter presided as chairman. Refreshments and a social time were enjoyed at the close of the evening.

A very successful "paternity" social was given Friday night by the aid society of the Calvary-Houston Square Baptist church in the Barraca class rooms of the church building. Many amusing stunts made the social most entertaining. Judge E. B. McClintock was the judge of a mock court. Mrs. J. H. Myers was the court reporter. J. L. Ouzts was sheriff and Tom Prothro was his deputy. An interesting program was given, in which Miss Margaret Irby sang several Spanish songs; Mrs. J. W. Rotermond and Miss Lela Cheney gave readings; A. Sutton played a flute solo, and Crawford Williams played a cornet solo. Refreshments of gingerbread, lemonade and popovers were served. The entertainment was in charge of the affair was composed of Messames J. L. Ouzts and R. L. Miller. On the program committee was Mrs. J. W. Rotermond and the refreshment committee was composed of Messames C. V. Jackson, C. L. Van Cuype, and Mrs. Ella P. About 150 people attended the social.

No Passenger Trains Run to Sea Coast While Soldiers Are Being Moved.

The newspapers of England were asked not to publish anything concerning military movements. They complied and the entire mobilization was conducted with the utmost secrecy. Two hundred and fifty thousand British troops were concentrated at sea ports, loaded on transport and moved to the continent, and the world knew nothing about it until they were on French soil and on their march to the front. When mobilization began the British government took possession of all railroads of the United Kingdom and for days regular traffic was interrupted.

There were no passenger trains from London to the seaports while the troops were being embarked. The mobilization was from Portsmouth, Southampton, Liverpool and Dublin, Ireland, and during the process, there was no regular traffic to or from those ports. In little more than a week after the movement began, the British expeditionary force was in conjunction with the French and Belgians.

French Move Rapidly.

In France the mobilization was conducted with the greatest dispatch and smoothness. To facilitate the concentration and avoid confusion at the point of assembly, the reservists were ordered to join the colors on separate days. Each man liable for mobilization had received an individual notice, commanding him to report at a designated place on a certain day. Thus the French army was concentrated in a remarkably short time and without confusion.

Huge Task in Russia.

In Russia the mobilization was a gigantic task. The czar, in the first stages of the war, was reported to have massed two million men on the German and Austrian frontiers. Military experts were amazed in contemplation of this colossal undertaking. Everything but the business of war was at a standstill. The troops had to be transported, some of them, for hundreds of miles, to the points of concentration. More than 400 trains daily arrived at the various camps. Trains ran continuously, crawling along one on the heels of the other. Every railroad line in Russia was used to haul cars of troops, vast flat-cars loaded with artillery, long trains of ammunition and provisions.

From the cities, villages and farms poured the Russian reserves. The stores were closed, the schools discontinued. Day and night all every could see, except the troops marching along streams of men, young and middle aged, hurrying to the nearest railway station to be carried to the front. The Russian mobilization was a task of colossal proportions. At the end of the long Balkan struggle, Austria-Hungary was on the verge of war with Russia, and latter got into a difficulty with Montenegro. At that time the Austrian reorganized the personnel. It was by half down the strategic plans which we have seen sweeping the German flag from the sea.

It is possible for the nation to be deprived at a time like this of the farseeing vision and high abilities of the officer to whom the navy owes so much.

Where is Sir Wilson?

"Where is Sir Arthur Wilson? No officer has ever done more than he to shape the strategic system and technical methods of the fleet. In this sense Sir Arthur Wilson is an organizer of victory. No officer has ever won so completely the admiration and confidence of the fleet by the sheer merit of all that he has done. Is it not right, then, that Sir Arthur Wilson should be called in to take command of the admiralty board?"

We do not want these officers to speculate in any sense the commander in chief of the fleet. They are to be too much occupied with to do any such thing, and Sir John Jellicoe, perhaps the greatest naval commander of the age, is not a man to be trifled with. Sir Vincent, and Sir Arthur Wilson, most trusted of officers, were acting in collaboration with the admiralty board.

The situation is such that the best men should now be at the country's service."

Maurice Schwartz—"The crowds in front of the war bulletin boards in New York intruded more than anything else. All nationalities crowded in front of the boards and watched the developments each day. The newspapers gave a splendid service. They had many showing the positions spent on the streets and in the stores of El Paso, soliciting for the budget fund of the El Paso fund and that it was not as cool as the California beaches nor as pleasant work as riding among the pines of Cloudcroft, but I could never find a more sincere and learned a lot of human nature in my soliciting work. We have raised almost all of the fund and that is some satisfaction, even if I had to give up my vacation to do it."

We have raised almost all of the fund and that is some satisfaction, even if I had to give up my vacation to do it."

War Excitement in New York.

Maurice Schwartz—"The crowds in front of the war bulletin boards in New York intruded more than anything else. All nationalities crowded in front of the boards and watched the developments each day. The newspapers gave a splendid service. They had many showing the positions spent on the streets and in the stores of El Paso, soliciting for the budget fund of the El Paso fund and that it was not as cool as the California beaches nor as pleasant work as riding among the pines of Cloudcroft,
